Bar changes atmosphere

Ted's features new music, juice bar

By HEIDI KEIBLER
Staff writer

To attract more Eastern students, Ted's Warehouse has recently changed its atmosphere.

Formerly a heavy-metal bar catering to mostly out of town residents, Ted's will now feature alternative and pop-rock music played by a D.J. on Wednesday and Thursday nights. Various bands will perform on Friday and Saturday nights.

On Saturday night, Ted's will feature a folk rock band from Australia called the Bludgers with an alternative band from Champaign opening called the Hinkleys.

"We're going towards a more college-oriented crowd," said Ted Bertuca, owner of Ted's Warehouse, 102 N. Sixth Street. "We used to attract a lot of out-of-the-area people, but that's just not happening now. We're trying to attract more students."

Bertuca said the decline in out-of-town business is definitely because of the 21-year-old bar entry age. He said groups of 21-year-olds stopped coming when their underage friends couldn't enter the bar.

To supplement his loss of revenue, Bertuca made arrangements so 18 to 20-year-olds can enter the bar to enjoy the bands and drink at a juice bar. Those underage cannot go upstairs where alcohol is served.

Bertuca said he implemented these changes in July but has seen no increase in business. He said the summer was unusually slow because of the raised entry age.

"There were no university students here to speak of," Bertuca said of Ted's Warehouse is the first tavern to install a juice bar.

And, at least for awhile, it may be the only one.

One local bar owner said he is not convinced that a non-alcohol area, separate from the rest of bar will be a popular hangout for Eastern students.

"If it doesn't involve sex, drugs and rock 'n' roll, the students don't really want anything to do with it," said Dave Isbell, owner of Roc's tavern, 410 Sixth St. "It is obvious with the business the bars did in the past, and it is obvious with all the after-bars."

Isbell said he doesn't really believe the students who voiced out in last year's forums will go to the non-alcohol areas.

Last year, the Charleston Alcohol Task Force held forums where several Eastern students said they went to bars summer session. "A lot of people used to stay but they just aren't anymore because of the crack down."

Wednesday was the first night Ted's opened since classes resumed. Bertuca said despite heavy advertising, very few customers showed up, including only about five students under 21.

"No people under 21 want to come into a bar where they can't drink when they can go to a house party where they can drink," Bertuca said. "They can go anywhere to drink, so why should they go to a bar and not drink?"

Annual Quakin' the Quad set for Saturday night

By DONNA CUISIA
Staff writer

It's one last night of free fun as Saturday night's fourth-annual Quakin' the Quad caps off the 10-day Panther Preview.

Quakin' the Quad is from 7 p.m. Saturday to 1 a.m. Sunday morning on the South Quad. The event is sponsored by University Board Special Events committee.

Quakin' the Quad is a night of novelty entertainment and free food and drinks for the students. In case of rain, the event will be moved to McAfee Gymnasium.

Cici Brinker, assistant director for Student Activities, said

• Weekend activities conclude Panther Preview.

Quakin' the Quad tries to provide students with entertainment and a place to meet people in a fun environment.

Activities such as sumo wrestling, orbitron and the and the velcro wall, were brought back by popular demand, Brinker added.

New activities for this year include bouncy boxing, an oversize inflatable boxing ring, ladder climb and bungee run.

Students may also record songs in the song-station booth and play bingo for prizes.

"We encourage students to arrive as early as possible to prevent having to wait in the lines," Brinker said.

Other sponsors for Quakin' the Quad include the Office of Orientation, Charleston Moose Lodge and the Eastern Parents Club.

University President David Jorns searches for the right words to explain the Strategic Plan during Thursday's meeting in the Martin Luther King Jr. University Union.

Students in dark about Eastern's strategic plan

By ADAM McHUGH
Administration editor

When Heather Cross hears the words "strategic planning," a bewildered look suddenly flashes across her face as she offers up an inquiry.

"What's that?" she asks.

Cross, a graduate student in communication disorders, took it upon herself to find out exactly what those words meant.

But where can the average Eastern student find out about Eastern's Strategic Plan?

Cross' dilemma is common with those students and faculty members who actually want to find out what Eastern's Strategic Plan involves and what role they play in it.

This hunger for administrative knowledge also inspired Eastern President David Jorns to hold a multi-media presentation for students and faculty Thursday.

The one-hour presentation tried to simplify the Strategic Plan, which is a long-range program that hopes to guide Eastern's planning for the year 2000.

But because the plan was developed by the administration, namely the Council on University Planning and Budget, few students have participated in the program.

And others have not even heard of the plan.

"I honestly had no idea what this thing was before I came here today," Cross said. "And even now I'm not completely sure of all the details."

Jorns said the presentation was supposed to bring the faculty and students closer to understanding the plan.

"For all the time this plan has been out, I have tried my best to explain it to faculty and students," Jorns said. "I have sent a lot of memos to the Student Senate about the program, but I haven't received an answer yet."

The plan, which has been under development since January 1993, is an on-going process which includes several articulated plans from different departments.

Cross said while the plan seems to have positive intentions, she believes it is not geared enough toward the student body.

"I think (the plan) is totally headed toward the administration side," Cross said. "There needs to be more focus on students, because we are the ones ultimately affected by it."

However, Cross thinks it's students' responsibility to attend forums and presentations on the subject.

Thursday's gathering of about 150 people for Jorns' presentation consisted mainly of faculty, staff, administration – and few Eastern students.

"I would give students the benefit of the doubt that they care about this plan, but not many people showed that today," Cross said.

While he realizes the plan can be hard to understand, Jorns believes the document is necessary for Eastern's future.

"I've seen a lot of plans like this, and many of them were completely worthless," Jorns said. "But I think this one will be a lot more useful because it involves the entire campus community."

Students can kick up their heels Saturday as Panther Preview continues with a Hoedown Uptown on the Charleston Square.

The Hoedown will last from 2 to 5 p.m. and will begin with hayrides from Old Main to the Square. The Hoedown, which is sponsored by the Office of Orientation, EIU Alumni Association, Charleston Chamber of Commerce and local merchants will feature line dancing, prizes, free music and more.

The Hoedown will be held around the Charleston Square and is designed "to make EIU students more aware of the community and what it has to offer," said Lucy Gomes, assistant director of the Office of Orientation.

"Many students have not even heard of the Charleston Square, let alone been there," Gomes said. "The Hoedown should make students aware that Lincoln Avenue is not really Charleston's business district."

To encourage more students to join the party,

The first 200 hayriders will receive free Western hats.

Once students arrive at the Hoedown, they can participate in a type of scavenger hunt. They will receive cards with the names of local merchants and must find the store to have their cards verified.

Gomes said prizes will include gift certificates for restaurants, coupons for free merchandise, T-shirts, a rug and more.

The Sawyer Brothers, a country-western band, will be performing throughout the afternoon on the Square's south side. While the Sawyer Brothers are playing, students can take part in free country line dancing lessons.

Also capping off the finale of Panther Preview week Saturday is Quakin' the Quad from 7 p.m. to 1 a.m. on the Library Quad.

Comedian Robbie Printz will perform at 10 p.m. in the Rathskeller After Dark coffeehouse, located in the Martin Luther King Jr. University Union.

Rathskeller next stop for comedian's show

By SAM McKEE
Staff writer

After appearing on MTV's Spring Break programming and opening for the rock 'n' roll band Aerosmith, comedian Robbie Printz will perform at 10 p.m. Saturday at the Rathskeller After Dark.

Printz is appearing in correlation with Panther Preview and kicks off this year's Rathskeller After Dark coffeehouse, which is located in the basement of the Martin Luther King Jr. University Union. Printz will appear as part the University Board's year-long comedy series. Admission is free.

Printz said when he comes to Eastern, he'll be using some observational humor about life, growing up and the college scene. He has been known to entertain crowds with a special song.

"He does a little takeoff from the Billy Joel song 'We Didn't Start the Fire.' It's hilarious," Carl Zuccarelli, UB comedy coordinator, said.

Printz said his song is a "mockery of the singles-bar scene," and he plans to perform it for the Eastern crowd.

Printz graduated from Bentley College with a degree in computer information systems. However, with all of the success he's found on the stage, he said there's "no chance" anyone will ever find him working in a computer room.

Printz' first performance in stand-up comedy was at Vince's Comedy Shop in Boston in October 1988. At age 21, he won the 1990 Boston Comedy Riot, a competition of approximately 140 comedians.

City's cheers may become jeers for local mayor

The citizens of Charleston now have the playing field they so desired.

Now they have to play the game by the rules.

In order to beautify the town, Cougill and company banned indoor furniture from the front porches of homes. The citizens of Charleston cheered.

Editorial

In order for his police department to have easier access to house party locations, Cougill and company enacted a keg registration ordinance. The citizens of Charleston cheered.

In order to curb underaged drinking, Cougill and company raised the bar-entry age to 21 years old. The citizens of Charleston cheered.

It appears that this is a very excitable city. And why not?

Once again, the streets of this city are safe to stroll, free from the fear of drunken collegians.

Well, almost.

Cougill, along with the ever-agreeable university administration, made a lot of promises that came under the umbrella topic of "bar alternatives." But like a certain other Cougill promise, it was broken. There are no new "alternatives."

For the most part, Charleston rolls up its sidewalks at 11 p.m. So where is an underaged student to go for an "alternative?" The answer in the minds of many for the past week has been house parties.

Hundreds of students - of all ages - have filed from the bars into the homes. Thus bringing the bars into the community.

Although Cougill's eyes must be gleaming with delight at how to face this obstacle, he hasn't flinched yet.

So, the city may not be cheering for long.

But the campus doesn't want to hear it.

When some college student stumbles into a resident's yard at 3 a.m. with nothing on but a pair of boxer shorts and a lamp shade, don't blame the students. Charleston residents have forced students from the supervised confines of a bar.

So next time Charleston, be careful what you wish for, you just might get it.

And it might live next door.

Wood chucks committee Nixon's name

The man who brought tan chinos and monotonous speech back into vogue is at it again. Student Body President Blake Wood, Eastern's original renaissance man, has proposed to abolish the Student Senate's Election Committee.

As it currently stands, the committee is made up of senate members responsible for overseeing both fall and spring elections. Last semester, the committee found the Impact Party, Blake's party, guilty of campaign violations which resulted in a 40 percent vote slash to all party candidate's totals.

But the ruling of the committee was overturned when some of Blake's cronies on the student Supreme Court - a collection of former senate has-beens and pathetic resume inflaters - hauled their carcasses off a Marty's bar stool and onto a "judicial" bench.

"The importance of this change is to remove all supervision by the senate over elections," Blake said in Thursday's edition of The Daily Eastern News, while most likely sporting a smart pair of tan chinos, navy sport jacket and red "power tie" - all available from the Bob Dole Young Republican Collection.

"That way, there would be no conflict of interest to worry about."

No conflict of interest, unless you consider a hand-picked elections committee and a pro-Blake student Supreme Court a conflict of interest.

Allowing Blake Wood to shape the future of campus politics is like giving Kitty Dukakis the keys to your liquor cabinet - there's going to be an awful mess left over for the next person who comes along.

This kind of court-packing, greasy politicking certainly rivals that of the Nixon Administration. And speaking of Nixon:

In an eerie bit of foreshadowing, Blake actually charged summer graduates in his address this

J.A. Winders

"Without Watergate, Nixon would have been sitting on a beach, sipping Chivas from a coconut shell..."

August to go forth and be like Nixon.

Now last time I checked, bold-faced lies to voters, illegal political maneuverings and a proud collection of felonies were not exactly what employers were looking for in potential employees. But from the appearance of last semester's election, these must be qualities Blake looks for when slating his own party.

Name-dropping Nixon at graduation is similar to dropping Eastern Athletic Director Bob McBee's name at an all-you-can-eat buffet - a lot of people will become frightened.

Blake went on to praise to Nixon's resiliency and his ability to overcome the troubles of the past. But Blake doesn't realize that without Watergate, Nixon would not have been resilient.

Without Watergate, Nixon would have been sitting on a beach, sipping Chivas from a coconut shell and ordering out for Chinese food. But Watergate did happen, so Nixon is now considered resilient and Blake feels it necessary to cast forth a few thousand more Nixon drones into the work force.

Proving there is a God above, Nixon is dead. However, proving there is no God above, Nixon's legacy continues on in Blake's heart and actions.

Blake's worries about a "conflict of interest" do not solely rest with the Elections Committee, they should rest with every supportive body tied to the senate.

Witness the student Supreme Court and its actions and then deduce what the face of Blake's unbiased elections committee will be like.

Nixon's CREEP got him elected, but Wood's creeps will keep himself and his buddies in office. And that's how it will stay, if Blake gets his way.

Senior citizens should thank representative for continued support

Dear editor:

Senior citizens today are healthier, happier and, in general, more involved in their own futures.

There have been several times in the past several years when seniors in our area have needed help to maintain their independence, and Rep. Mike Weaver was there to help.

His leadership and support helped save our van program, continue funding for in-home services and keep our Meals On Wheels on the road.

His support extends beyond the senior centers because he supported a property tax freeze on seniors whose incomes are under $35,000 because many are finding it increasingly difficult to live in their own homes during retirement.

We have always felt that the more independent older Illinoisans can remain, the healthier and happier they are.

And with continued support from people like Mike Weaver, we will remain more productive and less of a burden on society.

New speaker working on tarnished group image

By DAVE HOSICK
Student government editor

The newly-elected Student Senate speaker said her main goal is to show students how qualified and hard-working the members of Student Government really are.

Junior Stacy Hart was elected to the speaker's position in Wednesday's Student Government meeting. Hart has been a member of the senate for a year.

She said the image of Student Government was tarnished by the problems in last semester's elections. In April, the Elections Committee deducted 40 percent of the votes received by the Impact Party for campaign violations.

A student Supreme Court decision in May overturned the decision.

"The first thing we need to do is fix what was broken in the last election," Hart said. "With some hard working senators resigning, this is going to be hard work."

Student body president candidate Katina Gillespie, former speaker Lance Phillips and senate member Mike Treis all resigned, citing personal problems and conflicts with the new student administration.

"I can not and will not allow myself to work with this shallow of an organization," Gillespie said.

Hart said, "It is very upsetting to see these senators resign because of the hard work and great ideas they brought to the senate. Hopefully the new senators coming in can pick up the slack and keep up the hard work."

Hart wants students to come to the weekly senate meetings to get a more informed view about Student Government and contribute policy ideas.

She said she will continue to work on creating fair financial aid deadlines, a recycling program and better relations between students and academic offices.

Hart said she would also like to pursue the "What Has the Senate Done for You Lately" forums, which are meant to acquaint students with the Student Government.

Hart said she is wary about Wood's recent idea to eliminate the Elections Committee and replace it with a student elections commission, comprised solely of students not affiliated with Student Government.

"I think it is a good idea to get more students involved, but I don't think that eliminating the (Elections) Committee is the answer," Hart said. "I would wonder who is knowledgeable enough about Student Government to serve efficiently on the committee."

Hart said in future elections she would like to see some things change, such as enforcing stricter party guidelines or eliminating the party system all together.

Circus to benefit children's group

By VANESSA MATHEWS
Staff writer

A circus is coming to the area tonight to help raise money for a local organization.

Toq Lawrence, executive director of Big Brothers-Big Sisters of Mid-Illinois, said the Carson and Barnes Circus will be set up at the Coles County Airport grounds, along Route 16 between Charleston and Mattoon, to help raise funds for the program.

Lawrence said a variety of wild animal acts will be part of the entertainment under the circus tent. She said clowns, trapeze artists and jugglers will also be featured entertainment.

Anyone who arrives early on Friday can watch the tents being raised with the help of the elephants, Lawrence said.

Two shows will be held on Friday at 4:30 and 8 p.m. Tickets can be purchased at the gate.

WEIC Radio is sponsoring the circus to help raise funds for the program. Four years ago, WEIC raised $4,500 when they sponsored the circus for Big Brothers and Big Sisters.

Lawrence said she would like to see $3,000 to $5,000 raised this year.

Big Brothers-Big Sisters of Mid-Illinois is a social service program directed toward children in single parent homes.

"We provide the children with an adult friend that they can spend time with," Lawrence added.

She said the organization needs more volunteers to spend time with the children and added that Eastern students are welcome to participate with the event.

"We'd love to see more Eastern volunteers join in and spend some time with the children," Lawrence said. "These children are considered to be high risk and need to have a second adult figure in their life."

Parking permit sales fall

By BRIAN HUCHEL
and MIKE MEYER
Staff writers

Parking permit sales have dwindled sharply in past days and more than 50 restricted parking permits remain unsold despite large student turnout and long lines Monday.

Restricted permits allows students who are under 21 or have less than 60 semester hours to park in the Ninth Street or O'Brien Stadium parking lots.

Unrestricted permits allow students to park in any student designated spaces on campus. Only students who are over 21 or have more than 60 semester hours can purchase the passes.

Both permits went on sale Monday morning in the Martin Luther King Jr. University Union. Since that time the parking division of the University Police Department has sold 328 permits, 72 less than the 400 restricted permits it originally made available.

Unrestricted permit sales have not been totalled yet.

Campus police Sgt. Ron Osborne said he expects permit sales to continue for several more days.

"Last year, (undergraduate) permits were on sale for the entire year because we didn't sell enough," Osborne said. "I doubt if we will sell the rest of the permits by next week."

Osborne said despite this, campus police still intend to stop sales at 400 restricted permits in order to assess the condition of the lots.

"Before we can sell any more permits, we need to check to see if there are any extra spaces," Osborne said. "We can't go by last year's results because we never sold all of the permits."

Osborne said assessment of the parking lots will probably take about two weeks to complete.

Although the number of

UPD cracking down on bicycle parking

By BRIAN HUCHEL
Campus editor

Bicycles parked on or chained to disabled ramps are causing havoc for the campus police and could be impounded, University Police Sgt. Ron Osborne said Thursday.

Under codes stated in the university's bicycle parking policy, student bicycles found "parked at handicap rails or in such a fashion as to impede normal foot traffic, will be immediately taken from that location."

A bicycle can be impounded for impeding sidewalk traffic or immobilized for a 24-hour period for being attached to an object other than a bicycle rack.

If a bicycle remains unclaimed after the 24-hour period, it will then also be impounded.

When students go to reclaim their bicycles at the University Police Station, they will receive a $5 citation. Although a citation does not have to be paid when it is issued, it must be paid on the assigned date or the academic records of the student will be placed on hold.

Osborne said bicycles blocking disabled ramps present a hazard not only to students, but also to the university.

"If a handicapped student fell over one of the bikes, the university could be held liable for not keeping the walkways clear," Osborne said. "The way the bikes are parked now, it could happen."

"We are seeing more and more bicycles on campus every year," Osborne said. "Right now, the university is in the process of ordering more bike racks to compensate."

Osborne said although enforcing bicycle policies is helpful to all students, keeping the disabled ramps clear is a top priority.

"I've seen bikes with their front wheel over the edge of the rail," Osborne said. "That would be about eye level for students going up the ramp."

students showing up to buy parking passes continues to decrease, the lines were still long enough to frustrate some students. At 8 a.m. Monday, lines to buy the parking permits extended from the third floor of the Union and down three flights of stairs to the first floor of the building.

Greg Short, a senior industrial technology major, said he thought the lines were as long as they were because the sales did not begin soon enough.

"They should have had them on sale earlier," said

Short, who was buying an unrestricted pass. "I came (to the police) on Friday and I couldn't get one."

Senior Sara Shumard, a junior high education major, said she would have liked the campus police to be a bit more accommodating on setting ticket sales dates. "I came yesterday and the line was way too long, so I didn't get one," Shumard said.

"All the students here are trying to buy passes," said Scott Warfield, a senior speech communications major. "It gets old."

Donations to congressman could mean more trouble

WASHINGTON (AP) — Campaign reports for Illinois Rep. Mel Reynolds, indicted last week on sexual charges, fail to list thousands of dollars in contributions since 1991 as required by law, a review of election records found.

A spot check of the unreported political action committee donations turned up some that were deposited at two banks that at the time were not registered to handle his campaign accounts.

The Chicago Democrat's campaign finances are being investigated by federal authorities. State officials last week charged him with child pornography and sexual assault of a 16-year-old campaign volunteer.

The government imposes strict rules requiring campaigns to quickly disclose donations and spending to ensure no political money is misused.

Federal law imposes penalties up to $5,000, or 100 percent of the campaign money involved, for failure to disclose donations.

The Federal Election Commission can double those fines and also recommend criminal prosecution if the violations were knowing and willful.

Reynolds and his former campaign treasurer, who has filed a complaint against the congressman with the FEC alleging campaign irregularities, differ on who is to blame for the finance problems.

Reynolds said he believes any unreported PAC contributions were spent on the campaign. He blamed former treasurer Earl Worthington.

"If it wasn't on the report, that means that either Mr. Worthington deliberately didn't put it on or it was an oversight," Reynolds said.

He said he is reviewing all campaign records and would file amended reports to disclose any donations that previously were not.

Several unreported donations have occurred since the congressman's wife, Marisol Concepcion, took over as treasurer.

Concepcion was first listed on FEC records as treasurer for her husband on Jan. 30, 1992.

But Reynolds said Worthington still did all the reporting and managed the campaign's money until April 1993 and his wife just signed the reports.

Worthington, however, said he was "a ghost treasurer" who simply followed Reynolds' instructions.

Largent doubling duties for Panther special teams

By RANDY LISS
Associate sports editor

In a game that relies on specialists, whether it be nickel backs, third down backs, pass rushers or goal line teams, it is refreshing to see a player who can do more than one job especially well.

Steve Largent, the Panthers' All-Gateway Conference place-kicker, has turned into a one-man kicking crew this season, adding punting to his duties.

After senior punter Darrell Rennels graduated in May, coach Bob Spoo and his staff went on the recruiting trail in search of a punter. But when the battle for one recruit took the Panthers into the end of July, the coaching staff decided to take the time to look in front of itself, and there was Largent.

"He's been excellent," Spoo said. "It's as though we didn't have a void there. The thing I was worried about was the get-off time from the snap to the kick, but he's got good feet and he's been punting the ball very well."

"And there's been no drop-off from his place-kicking."

Largent hit on all 29 of his point-after attempts in 1993 and has a current streak of 58 straight through last year. He also nailed 11 of 16 field goals, including a 52-yarder against Indiana State.

Freshman Anton Manuel has been penciled in to return punts, but Spoo said that a number of people could be thrown back there, including starting quarterback Pete Mauch.

"When we get into a game situation, Manuel is probably going to be the one returner," Spoo said. "(Senior) Billy Korosec will also be a return man. Pete Mauch and James Dorsey could also return. Obviously if it's Pete, he would be in there strictly in a fair catch situation."

As for kickoffs, Manuel and senior Ray McElroy, who led the Gateway in kickoff return average in 1991, are slated as return men for the Panthers.

Ralston testing the waters in search of middle hitters

By TIM BROZENEC
Staff writer

Just as a fish is not complete without water, a glass of tea without sugar, or a mower without grass, any team ultimately needs the contributions of each of its members to be successful, and this year's Eastern women's volleyball team is no exception.

While the outside hitters, led by Kaaryn Sadler, and the setters appear solidified for now, coach Betty Ralston said Thursday that the two starting middle hitters are still unknown to her.

"We're not a real experienced middle," she said. "I'll just continue to look for the best combination of two players that I can, but at least at the beginning several will get playing time."

The five-member group applying for the two vacancies are Amy Poynton, a junior with some college middle experience, Jenny Damon, a sophomore who also knows a little about the middle and Monica Brown, Lindsey Celba and Lorri Sommer, all freshmen.

According to one Olympic study cited by Ralston, in an average match the middle hitters run what amounts to around four-and-a-half miles, trailing only the setters who run five miles per match.

"Middles are responsible for the majority of the blocking. They should be able to get to every set," Ralston said.

Offensively, Ralston said that the middles usually do the quick attacks, which are low, unanticipated sets over the net used to outwit the defenders. This helps hold the other team's middle blocker so more one-on-one situations can be opened up for Sadler and others.

Defensively, the middle hitters do mostly blocking, but this is important.

"If they don't get to the outside, the back row has more work to do," she said. "They are really the last line of defense."

Because of the importance of the middle position, and the added weight of inexperience there, Ralston said that the team is working the middle a lot in practice, for which she hopes to garnish the reward of having a true volleyball team, one that works together and wins games.

A women's alumni volleyball match will be held this Saturday at 1 p.m. in McAfee Gym, followed at 3 p.m. by the men's team against its former alumni, Ralston announced Thursday.

very hard on her to run both teams without another coach.

"There's no way she can be in two different places at the same time."

More than anything else, Welch speaks like a member of a team with an uncertain future playing a sport with an uncertain fate.

"It's hard to get motivated right now," Welch said. "It's hard to know what to expect and what she is going to be like. Everything's still up in the air."

But one thing is for certain. The new coach is not named John Ross.

"We liked Coach Ross," Welch said of the man who led the women's team to a second-place finish in the Mid-Continent Conference last season before resigning last month.

"He took us from being in last place my freshman year to second in the conference. That says something."

Setter job up for grabs

By ANTHONY NASELLA
Staff Writer

When considering the accomplishments of Amy Van Eekeren, graduated standout volleyball setter and Eastern's all-time assist leader, finding a player to match her ability for this season could be nearly impossible.

But Panthers' coach Betty Ralston has placed her confidence in two underclassmen and their potential ability to do an adequate job in the setting position.

Competing for the spot will be freshmen Kara Harper, a standout from Colchester High School, and Rockford Boylan's Shana Bjornstad, a sophomore who made the squad in the spring.

"Both of them have made quite an impact already," Ralston said. "We think they are both capable of doing a solid job for us. We want them to concentrate on the setting duties for us."

- Lady Panthers look to fill their middle hitter spots. See page 7.

Both Harper and Bjornstad have proven themselves throughout their high school careers. Harper guided her team to a 38-5 record and second place in the IHSA Class A State Tournament last season. Bjornstad was the Most Valuable Player in her conference during her senior year.

And both players have shown versatility in their athletic backgrounds. Harper played three sports at Colchester, while Bjornstad was a three-year, all-conference soccer player at Boylan, leading her team to the Elite Eight all four years.

"They're both good athletes," Ralston said. "And since they are now totally dedicated to volleyball, they should get

Soccer team defense being helped by new faces

By DAN FIELDS
Staff writer

In many sports, your best offense is your defense. And with the only three returning lettermen listed as fullbacks, the Eastern soccer team may have a problem in this category.

But two transfer students – one from a Division-I school and one junior college transfer – may help fill the void left from two graduating seniors in Matt Cook and Vinko Kucinic

The three returning lettermen include Greg McDonald, Mark Gregory and Steve Van Dyke, while the four newcomers to Eastern are Randy Zolk, Joshua Cournaya Chris Turner and Bill Nunnamaker.

McDonald, a sophomore from Lincoln-Way High School in Frankfort, returns after a stellar season in which he scored two goals and three assists – more than any other fullback last year.

"He's very aggressive, has very good skills and is very, very deceiving," said head coach Cizo Mosnia. "When he gets the ball and has to do something, he's

Defensive line solid up front, lacks depth

By PAUL DEMSPEY
Staff writer

Defensive line coach Randy Melvin has a problem, and it seems to be a recurring theme at the Panther pre-season camp.

His line lacks depth.

All-Conference defensive end Demetrius Lane is the only starter lost from last season's squad. And although Melvin said he is pleased with his current front four, he said the backups need to develop more so a strain is not put on the starters.

"Right now I feel pretty good about the first team," Melvin said. "But for those guys to play every minute and make it through the whole year, I think that's a little unrealistic for me to think that."

While no one on this season's line played in every game last year, veterans Kevin Zeng and Chris Wilkerson are back in full force to anchor a line that will definitely see a lot of snaps this season.

"They're both seniors. I've coached them for five years and I expect a lot out of them. I always do out of my seniors," Melvin said.

Zeng missed a couple of games last year because of injuries but still led the team with eight sacks and earned Second Team All-Gateway Conference honors.

Wilkerson will start for the third consecutive year after hernia surgery forced him to miss four games in the middle of the season and reduced him to a part-timer at season's end.

Junior Curtis Price and sophomore Kendrick Hall will join Zeng and Wilkerson on the front line this season. Price started at defensive tackle last year but missed the final seven games because of an injury.

"(Price and Hall) didn't start the whole year, but there were situations and times where they did some playing so they have a little bit of experience," Melvin said.

Sophomore Kevin Ellison will miss the first half of the season to recover from reconstructive knee surgery, but hopes to return to the lineup after playing in 10 games last year.

Freshmen Ethan Banning and Jerry Guzaldo could see some playing time at defensive end.

With many new players coming in and moving to defensive line from other positions, Melvin has spent extra time teaching new techniques.

"We've got to spend more time correcting mistakes and breaking old habits, because they're coming in from

New tennis coach looks like a mystery - for now

By ROBERT MANKER
Sports editor

"A woman from Pennsylvania" has accepted an offer to become Eastern's new men's and women's tennis coach, Athletic Director Bob McBee said Thursday.

He declined to reveal the woman's identity without a signed contract in hand, which he said he will have by the weekend.

"It's not a good policy to discuss situations or speculate until you have a signed contract," McBee said. "I got burned once in the past by announcing it beforehand."

He said he knew her before he offered her the job, a part-time position, but said he has never worked with her before.

Melissa Welch, senior co-captain of the women's team, said the teams have been told they have a new coach but that they know little else about her.

"We do know she's played tennis before," Welch said. "She's pretty young. (Athletic department officials) said she was 26, but I'm not positive on that though."

"(McBee) said he got us a good one."

McBee said the woman, who had previously lived and worked in Pennsylvania before spending the last month in Florida, will arrive in Charleston Saturday.

She will be meeting with prospective team members at 7 p.m. Sunday in the Lantz Club Room.

The men's and women's tennis teams officially started practice Wednesday and will begin more serious workouts next week after the new coach arrives, McBee said.

"All they're doing right now is just stretching and hitting balls," McBee said. "I'm sure Monday they'll be going full tilt."

Welch said she greets the hiring of a new coach with mixed emotions but that she's willing to wait and see how the mystery woman runs things.

"I guess I'm glad we have a coach," Welch said. "But I think it's going to be

SOBERING night life

Raised bar entry age unearths hidden treasures

On June 16, Charleston awoke to the beginning of the end of underage socialization.

Some of the many students the change affects were not in Charleston the day tavern doors closed to those under 21. Although the new ordinance was passed prior to the end of spring semester, some students who swarmed back to campus in August were still unprepared for the change of a typical night out.

Some were even hoping the city council would have changed its mind.

But already underage students have started voicing concern, frustration and desperation for alternatives. Even the University Board, which provided such entertainment as Mardi Gras night during its Panther Preview week, will not be able to cater to students every weekend.

Still, students are searching for something that wouldn't cost them too much. More importantly, they are looking for entertainment in the Charleston area.

Although the Eastern community is not known for its night life, it does provide a few outlets for creativity, individual expression and entertainment. Places like the Dudley House, Charleston Alley Theater and the Rec Center are some examples. These hidden treasures are ready to be unearthed and experienced, not just by those under 21, but by all Eastern students. ■

New editors take rein of the Verge

Greetings and salutations to another sobering year at Eastern. Among the other numerous changes returning students are facing, we at the Verge have our own plethora of new laws, ordinances and even a change of command.

Verge editor David M. Putney will be taking a leave of absence this semester as he will be trekking out into a fearless domain called Peoria for an internship. In his place, previous Verge associate Elizabeth Raichle will take over this tempest-tossed publication which supplements The Daily Eastern News each Friday.

And for every Verge editor, there needs to be an associate. After a thorough FBI investigation, we were able to find Natalie Gott, who has been writing for the Verge about a year now. We at the Verge believe that after some heavy sedation and brainwashing, she too will join the ranks of the slightly tipped associates before her.

This marks a special change for the Verge, as this semester it will be under the direction of two female editors for the first time since 1990's Amber Grimes and Debbie Carlson. Of this, we are truly proud.

We at the Verge have every intention of carrying out our journalistic duty to provide entertainment news to the students of Eastern, focusing on the Charleston and Mattoon area. In addition to Tarble, Doudna, UB and other university entertainment, we plan to cover a wide spectrum of the arts, including local bands, movies, books and possibly others which have not yet been thought of.

Also, after some ceaseless hours of brainstorming, we at the Verge have decided to broaden our horizons as well as our readerships and delve more into the rather cloudy area of pop-culture. We want to know more about what makes students tick, how they feel about various aspects of Eastern and generally the world that surrounds them.

But enough of this "Dear Reader" stuff. Sit back and enjoy, and remember, all comments and suggestions are well appreciated. Have your people call our people at 581-2812.

Movie Review

by Steve Lysaker

'Danger' neither clear nor present

Harrison Ford's charm as an actor has always been his subtlety - he can relay more feeling with a simple expression than most actors can with a two-page diatribe.

Too bad the only expressions Ford can muster in "Clear and Present Danger" are frustration and confusion. The audience will feel the same way Ford looks.

Based on Tom Clancy's epic-length novel of the same name, "Clear and Present Danger" is a muddled film that never really makes its danger neither clear nor present during its 142-minute running time.

The biggest problem with "Danger," the same one that causes Ford's film-length perplexed glare, is the script. Three writers, John Milius ("Apocalypse Now"), Donald Stewart ("Missing") and Steven Zaillian ("Schindler's List") all took cracks at the script, each one with a different mission.

While Milius wrote the original screenplay, Stewart was brought in to punch up the role of Jack Ryan for Ford. After Stewart's considerable alterations to the script, including numerous departures from Clancy's book, Zaillian came on board to make the movie more like the book while maintaining Ryan as the core of the film.

The end result is a slow-moving suspense film about a covert guerrilla war launched by the White House against a Colombian drug lord in retaliation for the murder of a former drug cartel member who just happened to be a friend of the president.

Although "Danger," like every Clancy-based film, features a reliable supporting cast - Donald Moffat is brilliantly Reagan-esque as the president and James Earl Jones, back as Adm. James Greer, is always reliable - it wastes the considerable talent of Willem Dafoe as the field operative leading the covert guerrilla squad into Colombia and reduces Anne Archer's role as Ryan's wife to essentially a cardboard stand-up.

For all its problems, "Clear and Present Danger" does provide a few good scenes including the brilliantly staged onslaught of terrorists on a convoy of Chevrolet Suburbans carrying Ryan and other U.S. officials on a Bogota street.

But in the end, which takes far too long to reach, "Danger" turns into a "Missing in Action"-style rescue picture and never gives Ford or the audience the pleasure of seeing the normally subdued Jack Ryan kick some butt.

While the writers of "Danger" try for a bombastic battle of words - most of which can be seen in the film's trailer - between Ford and the Moffat at the conclusion, both actors' anger seems to stem less from acting and more from frustration of being held hostage in a muddled spy film that has all the drama of an Army vs. Navy football game.

- "Clear and Present Danger" is now playing at the Will Rogers Theater in Charleston.

Dudley House, Tarble offer a blend of poetry and art

The Dudley House

Reciting her own poetry before large crowds doesn't scare Mary Herrington-Perry like it would some people.

Herrington-Perry, coordinator of curriculum development and publications, said she has read her own poetry, as well as works from favorite poets, for many years.

"I do this sort of thing often enough," Herrington-Perry said. "It really doesn't make me nervous. It gets me excited."

Herrington-Perry is the featured reader for the Oct. 4 poetry reading at the Dudley House, 895 Seventh St.

The Dudley House poetry readings, sponsored by the Coles County Arts Council, has housed these readings for seven years now. When the Dudley House first opened, only featured readers recited poetry. After one year, Nan Hennings, director of the Coles County Arts Council, decided to change the readings to an open microphone format.

"It just seemed like a good idea," Hennings said. "Anybody who comes can get up and read the poems he likes and his own poems. I like to have both."

Hennings said the poetry readings attract an average of 25 people from Charleston and Eastern. She said Eastern staff and students comprise about two-thirds of the crowd.

Eastern English professor John Guzowski is the featured reader for the November first reading.

While Herrington-Perry and Guzowski are the featured readers for October and November, there will still be open-mic access when they finish.

Poetry readings are scheduled September through May on the first Tuesday of each month at the Dudley House. The readings begin at 7:30 p.m. beginning Sept. 6.

Tarble Arts Center

Tarble Arts Center has scheduled 15 art exhibitions, including wood sculptures, watercolors and the all-student show, for the 1994-95 academic school year.

Also scheduled for this year are poetry and fiction readings and the Chamber Music Series, which will feature groups such as the St. Louis Guitar Quartet and the Eastern Illinois University Music Faculty Chamber Ensembles.

Michael Watts, director of the Tarble Arts Center, said the Tarble Arts staff works with Eastern's art department and other to develop theme ideas.

"One of the goals we always have is to try to provide a good mix (of artwork) in terms of style, cultural," Watts said.

This year's exhibits feature works from artists from Mexico, South America, as well as North America.

Several key speakers, including Dr. Roslyn Adele Walker and Rachel Perry, will also lecture on their displayed artwork. Joel Feldman, whose wood sculptures are currently on display at Tarble, will lecture Sept. 14.

Music Review

Catherine's Horse rides mainstream

You always come back to the basics.

This motto can easily fit into the jigsaw puzzle of successful music. From the '50s to the '90s, one form of commercial music resurfaces continuously to breath fresh air into each new era: Simplistic pop music.

Charleston-based Catherine's Horse knows this well, for the band's smooth style is as radio-friendly as pop can get. Much like a blend between current commercial giants Smashing Pumpkins, Urge Overkill and Material Issue, Catherine's Horse borderlines on mainstream music.

Lead singer, guitarist and Eastern alumnus David J. said his band asserts individuality while keeping a grip on traditional pop mechanics.

"We're not like a lot of the other bands today. We're not hard, fast or political," he said. "We're just out to play good music - chrome-plated guitar pop with soaring harmonies."

The band's debut album, "Castles & Cupie Dolls," is a non-threatening collection of soft-core pop songs, occasionally flexing into harder territory, much like pop musician Paul Westerberg.

On the song "20 Something," Catherine's Horse uncovers its most prized possession: Driving instrumentation. Eastern seniors Joe Ingolia (guitar) and Ed Taylor (bass) consolidate and strengthen their respective heavy segments. This alteration allows crisp gaps that encourage the clarification of vocals.

The song "Christine" sounds a bit like a swirl between Kiss and The Monkees. While the combination seems a bit odd, the intentionally corny style of the track thrives. Lyrics such as "Christine, where are you?" and "I can't find you," fill the predictable humorous song. Hummable and lighthearted, "Christine" goes down almost too easily.

Catherine's Horse will host a record-release party 9:30 p.m. Saturday at The Uptowner, 623 Monroe St., with the band Crackpot.

Rec Center offers weekend activities

By MATTHEW SCOTT

With the school year beginning and the raised bar-entry age leaving many students wondering what to do with their spare time, the Student Recreation Center offers various activities for Eastern students.

Last year during the underage drinking crack-down, the Rec Center was one of the first "bar-alternatives" for nights and weekends. New activities, such as paddle-ball tables, checker sets and an arcade game, were added to the center. Weekend hours were also extended to midnight.

However, these modifications didn't attract many students to the Rec Center on Friday and Saturday nights.

"I'd be working until 11, 12 o'clock, and there would be three people here. It was crazy," said Jeremy Crisup, a student employee at the Rec Center.

Rec Center director David Dutler and assistant director Jeff Dvorak agreed, and even said student participation was as low as zero.

Dutler said having the Rec Center publicized as a "bar-alternative" may have created a negative image, leading to low student participation.

He also said there was little time to publicize the new hours. This year the Rec Center will return to a 10 p.m. closing time.

New student programs offered at the Rec Center this year are floor hockey in the enclosed gym and a self-defense class that will begin Sept. 27. In addition, a bumper-pool table was added to the game selection.

KARI SWIFT/staff photographer
Freshman English major Lisa Huber plays table tennis in the Student Recreation Center Tuesday afternoon.

Students who enjoy tennis, racquetball or other sports, but are unable to find a partner, can find one through a Rec Center sign-up board.

The Rec Center is open Monday through Friday from 7 a.m. to 10 p.m., Saturday from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. and Sunday from 12 to 10 p.m.

Uptown alley leads to theatric side of Charleston

By JEREMY R. KIRK

If you think there is nothing to do in Charleston, Tanya Wood of the Charleston Alley Theatre would say you are dead wrong.

For almost four years now, Wood has been a director, actor and producer for the community theater group which performs near Charleston's downtown square. Tucked away in an alley, Wood says the theater located on Monroe Street across from Will Rogers Movie Theater provides an activity for people.

"I don't think Charleston is as devoid as people think it is," Wood said. "I think there is a lot if you find it."

The community theater group, which performs at the Charleston Alley Theatre, produces one play in the fall and three in the spring. This summer, the theater has been working on a what Wood describes as a "drawing room comedy" called "The Circle" by Somerset Maugham.

The three-act play is scheduled for performance at the Charleston Alley Theatre in early October. Wood said most of the work for the plays, including construction of the sets, is done on the weekends because the actors have other jobs.

Because the theater only seats about 40 people and the audience is close to the stage, Wood said the theater has to be careful about casting people into roles which fit them.

Tryouts for plays are announced through the Charleston Times Courier, but Wood said the theater cannot draw on the same actors all the time because of their outside lives.

"We do attract young people too, but we don't have the luxury of a university convention (where all participants are around the same age)," Wood said. "Older people have to be older, and younger people have to be younger."

Wood said the theater has a commitment to doing good plays, and everyone involved with the theater comes to a decision on which play to perform. Overall, the theater prefers to perform plays regarded as classics.

"We like to do shows that we like to do. We talk about it and get ideas," Wood said. "We like to do classics in a sense. There are a lot of classics out there that need to be seen - you just have to see if you can do it."

Before the theater group acquired the Charleston Alley Theatre in 1991, Wood said they didn't have a permanent place to keep the groups' materials. Now, Wood said, it is a relief to have a place of their own.

"To be able to have a place to work is incredible," Wood said. "It is such a privilege to walk out the door and not take everything out that minute."

Previously, the theater had to rent a place to rehearse. Wood said it was difficult to find places to work, but Eastern was helpful in renting space to the theater corp when possible.

The theater is supported by the rent revenue from four apartments directly above the theater. Wood said the theater utilizes its materials repetitively and tries to recycle everything.

"Equipment, wood - everything costs," Wood said. "A paint can can cost 10 to 20 dollars nowadays."

In the front lobby of the theater works from local artists are featured. Wood said the theater opens one hour before a play, and people are free to look at the art even if they aren't attending the play.

This spring, the theater is planning three productions. The first is "Beyond Therapy" by Christopher Durang, which Wood said will be performed in January.

In March, the theater will perform "The Lion in Winter" by James Goldwin. Wood said "it is a neat play, - one of those cult things," and is, "very witty." In April, the theater will either perform a one-act play or a melodrama.

Wood said theater forces people to focus their mind and requires discipline of thought.

"You can take people that want to act and help them not to be scared," Wood said. "You can do theater. It's not like a violinist or a ballet dancer - there's no way you can fake that."

Wood said that certain things happen between the people during plays. "There is this thing about something live - it's being there in the room."

"Theater does that."
